Spring in Michigan is probably the most anticipated season of the year. According to scientists, Spring "Officially" begins on March 20 at 10:46 a.m. Scientists state that this is when "the vernal Equinox represents the moment the sun crosses the celestial equator, then moves northward, causing the Northern hemisphere to tilt towards the sun." That's quite a mouthful!

I was talking to a guy the other day who just moved to Michigan from Florida. When I spoke to him on March 20, the high temperature in Brooklyn was 65 degrees Fahrenheit. He excitedly stated, "Finally, the warm weather is here to stay!" At the time, we were hanging out with a group of locals, and they just laughed out loud. I explained to this gentleman that Michigan's weather reminds me of an old elevator joke: "How do you like working at the elevator company?" The reply is "You know, it has its ups and downs!" He laughed, but then I explained the difference in weather from Brooklyn, Michigan, to the Upper Peninsula.

I had just received a text from a guy whose dad lives in Negaunee, Michigan, in the U.P. While Brooklyn, Michigan's high on March 20 was 65, the high in Negaunee, Michigan was 38. Oh, and they had five feet of snow on the ground! This guy was freaked out because in Florida, the temperatures from northern Florida to southern Florida varied maybe 10 degrees. "Welcome to Michigan," I explained. The old saying that March's weather "comes in like a lion but goes out like a lamb" is definitely true.

So how does this affect wildlife? Nature has, for thousands of years, learned to adapt.

Two things that people here in Brooklyn look for in spring are the arrival of our state bird, the American robin. It is true that robins do migrate south for the winter, but did you know that some robins will remain here in Michigan for the winter? How do they look for worms when there is snow on the ground and temperatures drop well below freezing? First, if the area they live in has enough sumac trees, crabapple trees, and holly and juniper bushes nearby, they can survive on the berries of these plants. Secondly, they may form large flocks and huddle together for warmth.

Another sign of Spring is the sound of Northern peepers. Once the weather hits 40 degrees Fahrenheit for a few days, the male peeper, which is the smallest frog in Michigan at only 1 1/2 inches long, will start "peeping." They can produce a call, which is to attract females, up to 100 decibels. This is as loud as a chainsaw. When a bunch of males form a chorus, they can be as loud as 120 decibels, which you can hear two miles away! A week ago, they started singing, and there is an old saying that when the peepers start peeping within ten to fourteen days, you will probably need to start cutting your grass. But here in good 'ole Brooklyn, we've had temps in the low 20s and highs upwards to the mid-60s. Yep, our "Spring" temps are fickle. The peepers can adapt because they produce natural anti-freeze. When temperatures drop below freezing, they flood their blood and cells with glucose(sugar) and glycerol, preventing ice crystals from damaging tissues. Once the weather warms up, the males will start courting again. I remember many years ago, right here in Brooklyn, we had a snowstorm on Mother's Day, and once in July, we had snow flurries.

Last week's storms 'raised the roof,' so to speak, on some people's houses.

There are other signs Spring is right around the corner, such as the arrival of red-winged blackbird, sandhill cranes, and the not-so-beautiful turkey vulture. Dafodils will be blooming, and the maple syrup will be running. And right here in little 'ole Brooklyn, we are glad we don't live in the U.P.
